

Readington Township
Weather Advisory: Tuesday & Wednesday

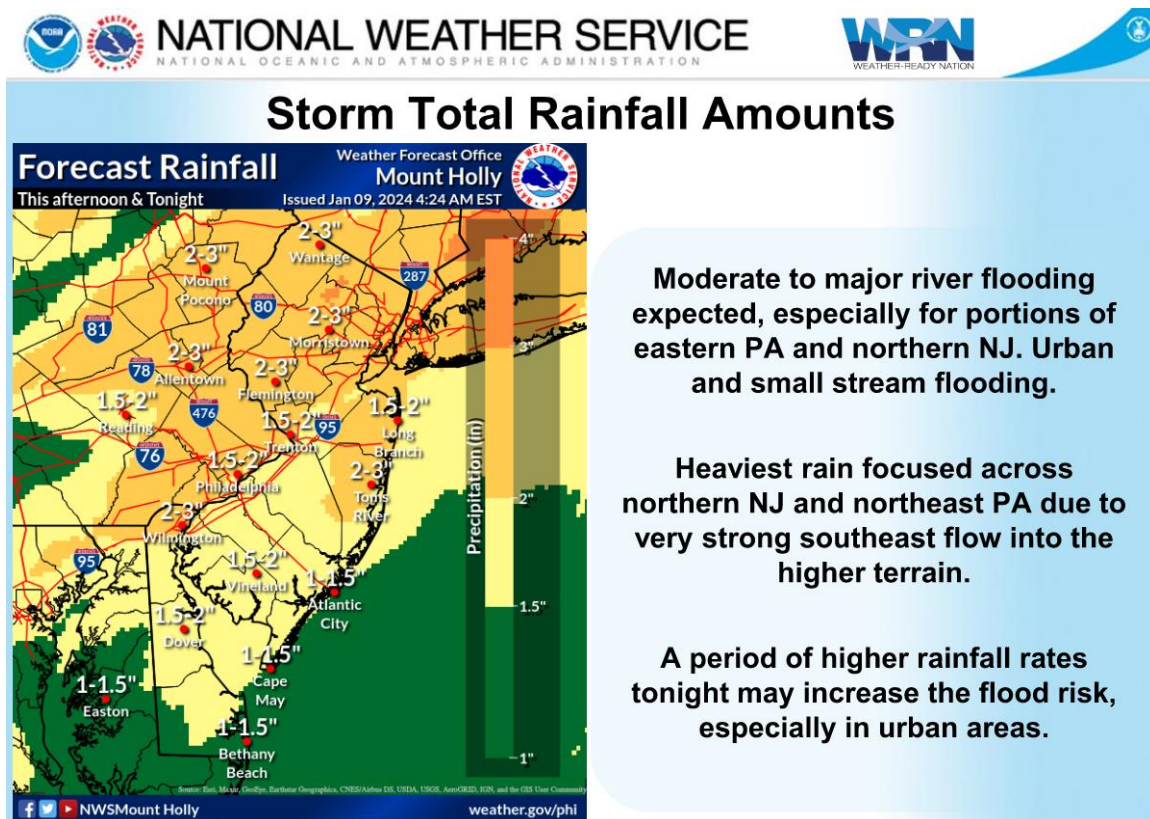

Readington and the immediate area will see a significant rain event over the next 24 hours. The current forecast calls for up to 2-3" of rain with localized areas of 4" possible with sustained 25-30 MPH winds with gusts reaching 55 MPH. The heaviest rain will fall from 6 PM this evening –to 2 AM Wednesday.

With the expected rain, coupled with the recent snow and saturated ground, Readington will likely experience severe flooding. The strong winds may result in downed trees, power lines, and other hazards, potentially causing power outages and road closures.

Given these conditions, residents must take this weather warning seriously and be prepared for potential disruptions. Residents should secure loose items outdoors, stay informed through local weather updates, and consider taking necessary precautions to ensure their safety.

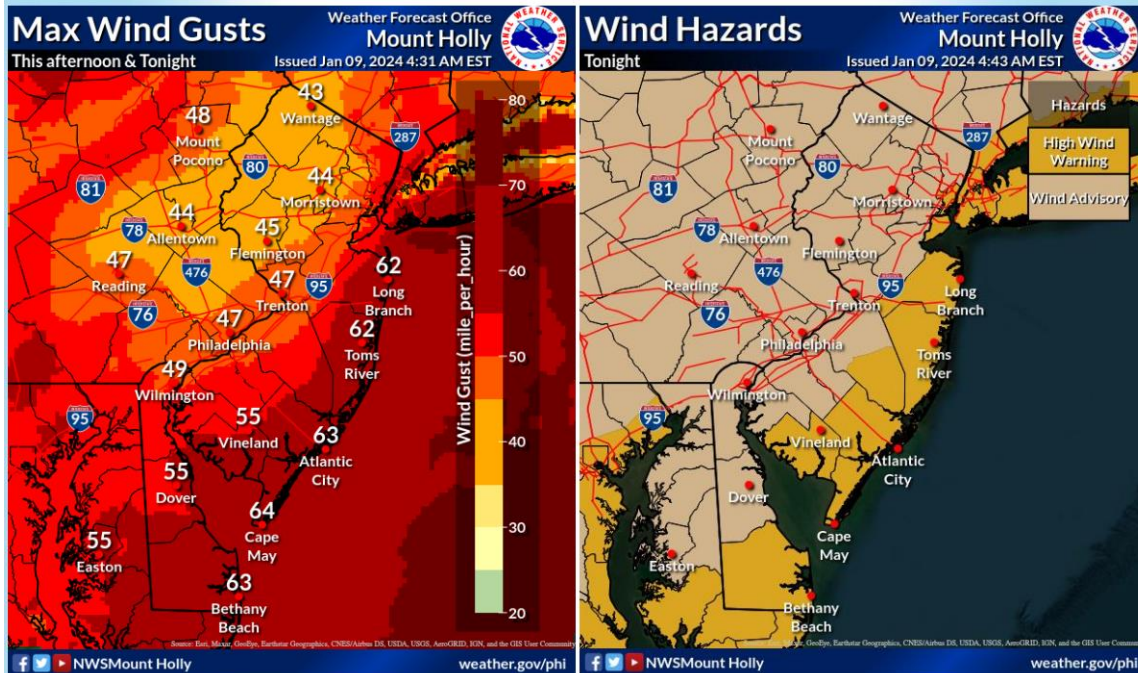

Report all power outages to 1-888-LIGHTSS. Do not call 911 unless there is an imminent hazard. All local emergency personnel are on stand-by and ready to respond if and when necessary – Readington is prepared.

This is not a storm to be taken lightly. Please continue to monitor this page for important updates.

High Winds This Afternoon and Tonight

National Weather Service
Advanced Hydrologic Prediction Service water.weather.gov/ahps/

